

Bram Stoker

Word Bank
Dublin's	Vlad Dracula	critic	London
Bram Stoker	films	beautiful	White House
Dracula	site	Oscar Wilde	Scotland
memory	ashes	friends	Dublin
athlete	Undead	son	folklore
Trinity College	notes	Sherlock Holmes	vampire
festival	Pennsylvania	Europe	science

When people talk about horror stories they often think about the most famous vampire novel of all time – _____. Many people don't know that this spooky tale about a blood-sucking monster, which is set in Transylvania, was actually penned by a Dublin man – _____.

Bram, or Abraham, was born on the 8th November, 1847 in Clontarf on _____ northside. As a young boy, Bram suffered from an unknown illness, but luckily for him he recovered in time to attend _____, Dublin where he studied mathematics and was a hugely successful _____. He was always interested in philosophy, history, art and drama and began his career as a theatre _____ with the Dublin Evening Mail. He would later go on to manage the famous Lyceum Theatre in London, which was owned by Henry Irving.

In 1878, Bram married Florence Balcombe from Marino, Dublin. Florence was very _____ and had been a girlfriend of another famous writer, _____. Bram and Wilde would later become good _____. Bram and Florence had one _____, Irving Noel Thornley Stoker. Bram had many notable friends including Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who wrote _____, and the American artist James Abbott McNeill Whistler. He was a keen fan of the American writer, Walt Whitman.

Bram Stoker

Bram and Florence lived in _____ while he managed the Lyceum Theatre. He also travelled extensively with its owner, Henry Irving, during this time also. He visited the United States of America on many occasions and was even invited to the _____ twice, where he met Theodore Roosevelt and William McKinley. Surprisingly, Bram never ventured to Eastern _____ even though his most famous work, Dracula, would be set there.

Bram began writing Dracula in 1897. He was inspired by visits to Whitby in England, Slains Castle in _____ and the tombs in St. Michan's Church in _____. This gothic or horror novel is centred on the character of Vlad Dracula, a _____, who lives in a remote castle in Transylvania. Stoker was influenced a great deal by European _____ and developments in _____ at this time. Many believe this led to some of the key ideas used in his writing. The original script was named The _____ but Bram later changed the title to how we know it by today. This script had been lost for many years, but was discovered in a barn in _____ in the early 1980s. It showed Bram's corrections and _____ which provide clues about his inspirations for the novel.

Stoker died in London on 20th April, 1912. Nobody has determined the cause of his death for definite, but his _____ are interred in Golders Green Crematorium. Later on, his son's ashes were placed in the same urn. Many people still visit this _____ today.

Nowadays, Dracula is probably best known due to the many _____ and T.V. series that have been based on it. The Dublin actor, Jonathan Rhys Myers, portrayed _____ in one such T.V. series. In Ireland, an annual Bram Stoker _____ is held in Dublin each year to commemorate the writer's achievements and _____. He remains one of the country's most famous literary figures.

Bram Stoker Answers

When people talk about horror stories they often think about the most famous vampire novel of all time – Dracula. Many people don't know that this spooky tale about a blood-sucking monster, which is set in Transylvania, was actually penned by a Dublin man – Bram Stoker.

Bram, or Abraham, was born on the 8th November, 1847 in Clontarf on Dublin's northside. As a young boy, Bram suffered from an unknown illness, but luckily for him he recovered in time to attend Trinity College, Dublin where he studied mathematics and was a hugely successful athlete. He was always interested in philosophy, history, art and drama and began his career as a theatre critic with the Dublin Evening Mail. He would later go on to manage the famous Lyceum Theatre in London, which was owned by Henry Irving.

In 1878, Bram married Florence Balcombe from Marino, Dublin. Florence was very beautiful and had been a girlfriend of another famous writer, Oscar Wilde. Bram and Wilde would later become good friends. Bram and Florence had one son, Irving Noel Thornley Stoker. Bram had many notable friends including Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who wrote Sherlock Holmes, and the American artist James Abbott McNeill Whistler. He was a keen fan of the American writer, Walt Whitman.

Bram and Florence lived in London while he managed the Lyceum Theatre. He also travelled extensively with its owner, Henry Irving, during this time also. He visited the United States of America on many occasions and was even invited to the White House twice, where he met Theodore Roosevelt and William McKinley. Surprisingly, Bram never ventured to Eastern Europe even though his most famous work, Dracula, would be set there.

Bram began writing Dracula in 1897. He was inspired by visits to Whitby in England, Slains Castle in Scotland and the tombs in St. Michan's Church in Dublin. This gothic or horror novel is centred on the character of Vlad Dracula, a vampire, who lives in a remote castle in Transylvania. Stoker was influenced a great deal by European folklore and developments in science at this time. Many believe this led to some of the key ideas used in his writing. The original script was named The Undead but Bram later changed the title to what we know it by today. This script had been lost for many years, but was discovered in a barn in Pennsylvania in the early 1980s. It showed Bram's corrections and notes which provide clues about his inspirations for the novel.

Stoker died in London on 20th April, 1912. Nobody has determined the cause of his death for definite, but his ashes are interred in Golders Green Crematorium. Later on, his son's ashes were placed in the same urn. Many people still visit this site today.

Nowadays, Dracula is probably best known due to the many films and T.V. series that have been based on it. The Dublin actor, Jonathan Rhys Myers, portrayed Vlad Dracula in one such T.V. series. In Ireland, an annual Bram Stoker festival is held in Dublin each year to commemorate the writer's achievements and memory. He remains one of the country's most famous literary figures.